WAGNER'S COMIC OPERA.

Leo Slesak Sings Good-by and Arturo Toscanini Conducts It.

These are the days of final appearances for the season, and in "Die Meistersinger." which was given at the Metropolitan Opera House last evening, the talles tenor, Leo Slezak, sang "auf wiedersehen." Much excitement was caused recently by the publication of a story that Mr. Slezak would not return, but he sings au revoir and not good-by. He will pervade the stage again next winter if nothing happens in the meanwhile to him or it. Walther von Stolzing, the gallant young Ritter who declared—to the consternation of the meistersingers—that his minnesinger master was Walther von der Wogelweide, had Mr. Slezak as his representative last evening.

Sensitive operagoers will probably prefer to witness Mr. Slezak's agonies as Otello or to drink in excitement with his "Die quella pira" in "Il Trovatore." Mr. Slezak is a very robust person and his vocal style has not the lyric elegance demanded by the fluent melodies of the music of Wagner's comic opera. Mr. Witherspoon, who was the Pogner, was also heard for the last time, but most important of all perhaps was the farewell bow of Mr. Toscanini, who sails for Europe on Saturday to hurry to Genoa and there take ship for Buenos Ayres, where he will conduct a summer season at the Colon Theatre.

Mr. Toscanini was warmly received when he appeared last night and was heartily applauded in the course of the evening. The distaff side of last night's cast comprised Miss Destinn as Eva and Miss Wickham as Magdalena. Hermann Weil was the Hans Sachs. It was a good performance on the whole and the audience was lessed.

J. Pierpont Morgan Lends His Collection of Merovingian Gold, Silver and Glass.

A number of important access cluding paintings of the English and American school, an early Athenian Attic vase examples of ceramics and classical antiquities, were announced yesterday afternoon by acting Director Henry W. Kent at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

One of the interesting pictures among the new acquisitions is the painting "Cremorne Gardens," by James McNeill Whistler, which has been purchased by the museum, and is now on view in the room of recent accessions. "Like our 'Nocturne in Green and Gold' and Mrs. Untermyer's Falling Rocket,' and all those canvases inspired by Cremorne Gardens, this picture was painted in the '70s," says Bryson Burroughs, curator of paintings at the "It is an unfinished work of grea promise and would have been a masterpiece in all probability had it not been for the intervention of financial troubles which led to its forced sale with other effects of the artist in 1879. It was bought at that time by T. R. Way, who has owned it until lately. In 1905 the picture was lent by Mr. Way to the memorial exhibition in London, where it was catalogued with this description, 'A sketch of the gardens. In the foreground a number of people are promenading. To the right a gentleman, the artist and three ladies are seated at a table. In the centre are tables, and still more tables to the left. Across the background stretches a light wall or screen upon which the shadows of the figures are cast. The garden is illuminated with little colored lamps, white on the right and red on the left. Waiters in red coats to extreme right and left. The quality of the work is more akin to the quality of Whistler's pastels." As a gift from Rodman Wanamaker, the museum has received a painting entitled "The Toilette," by Frederick C. Frieseke, a young American artist, who has studied abroad, where his pictures have een more frequently shown than in this country. It is on view in the room of new From Victor G. Fischer the museum

It was announced that the new dormitory on which work was started this week is to be called Cuyler Hall, in memory of the late Cornelius C. Cuyler, '19.

At to-day's meeting Cyrus H. McCormick of Chicago presented to the university five items from the Hoe sale relating to Americus Vespucius. These include the first edition of the complete account, the very edition from which the name America was given to the New World and the only copy in America. Great curiosity was expressed among bibliophiles after the Hoe sale as to the real purchaser and ultimate destination of the set, and it now appears that this choicest special collection on America in America was purchased through Mr. Hill by Mr. McCormick with the intention of presenting it to Princeton University.
